If you have published or will publish the details of the winners of your procurement procedure on TED, please be aware of the fraud method described below. A number of successful attempts have been reported based on this method or with variations:

Fraudsters monitor websites where information about awarded contracts is published, such as TED.

They first contact the supplier. They pretend to be the customer and ask to be forwarded the invoice related to the contract published on TED.

Once they have received the invoice, they contact the customer, pretending to be the supplier. They request that the payment be made to another bank account than the one listed on the real invoice, which will be an account controlled by the fraudsters.

The key element in the reported cases is the combined use of real contract information and pressure applied by the perpetrators.

Given that you are listed on TED as the contact point for your organisation, there is a possibility that you might be targeted by a fraud attempt along the lines described above.

We encourage you to be extra cautious and vigilant, especially if you are asked to make a payment to a supplier using a different bank account than you would have expected.

If you experience something that you suspect could possibly be a fraud attempt, we recommend that you contact the supplier directly to verify that you are paying the right entity. Use an established form of communication with that specific supplier to make sure that you are in contact with the real supplier.

Please inform your collaborators and any other persons who might be exposed to this fraud method.

If you find yourself targeted by a fraud attack, please report it to the relevant authorities in your country.
